Crimes and Criminals.

The Sunday Enquirer-always a little in the Police Gazette line on Lord's daytakes issue with a published statement of the Mayor, that there were no murders committed in the city during the year 1858. The editor, from the stores of his own memory-what a capacity for useful knowledge !--goes on to give a list of cases of various grades of homicide that occurred within the period indicated, which seems to put the showing of the civic functionary a little out of countenance. So far as these matters are in the nature of a controversy between the past and the present Mayors, in respect to the comparative vigilance and success of their importance to anybody. Future generations will not be very likely to place the golden age of Cincinnati within the reign of either.

In the manufacture of sinners, there is show of respectability which, by many, is greatly coveted. To declare all mankind utterly criminal and reprobate, is to place ourselves upon pretty high ground in respect to virtue and morality. Disgust at the depravity of the human race is usually accompanied by a desire to make public, if not the depravity, at least the disgust; and for that purpose there is a willingness to state the matter in terms as vivid as possible. To minister to this spirit, gentlemen of the press are prone to look upon themselves as especially dele gated. The strong point with many of them is indignant virtue. When not virtuously indignant, they are nothing. In their vocabulary, every homicide is a murder; every murder a horrid murder and every horrid murder "accompanied by circumstances of unheard-of atrocity.' What more natural, then, than to lapse into a state of maudlin morality. Good Heavens! how wicked the world is getting to be! How long can society survive such an awful condition? Upon this society becomes uneasy. It wonders whether something ought not to be done to check the progress of vice, and strike terror to the hearts of evil doers, Courts and juries catch the infection. Somebody must be convicted. A hanging is needed to restore the lost moral tone of the community. The balances of justice are in this way disturbed, and cease to weigh correctly; and bent upon its own self-rectification, society can not rest until it has committed some signal act of retri-114 bution. There are not wanting judicial officers base enough to seek popularity by ministering to this morbid demand for somebody to punish; and a judicial murder perhaps, comes in to make the vicious circle complete. Something of this kind must have been going on at Baltimore. The Lutheran Observer states that there are five or six men under sentence of death in that city. They are young; from twenty-two to twenty-five years of age; and stand convicted of murder in the first degree. "As it is," says the Observer, "no doubt true, that man does not reach the highest grade of crime at one leap, it becomes an inquiry of importance to others, how these young men, just in the prime of life, and some of them respectably connected, find themselves in the presence of the death of felons." As the time of these young men is probably short, a preliminary inquiry would not be much out of order: whether, taking all the facts into consideration, they are really guilty of the very unusual crime of homicide with premeditation-murder.

Life taken with calculating malice is not a common occurrence in this age and country. Between it and a sudden deed of man-slaying in hot blood, in a state of intoxication, under the influence of a real or fancied provocation, in the midst of a quarrel, a fray, a mob, or a riot, there is a great and wide difference. The one is the worst and least excusable act that a human being can commit; for the other, it is easy to imagine, in the present state of society, and the natural weakness of human nature, a thousand extenuating circumstances. Without knowledge of the facts in any of the cases, it is not very unsafe to conjecture that a recollection of the disrepute into which the city of Baltimore has fallen through recent popular disturbances, and a prevailing desire to vindicate its character in the eyes of the world and their own, has operated upon the minds of courts and juries, and led them to visit upon the offenders in question a higher degree of severity than the facts will justify. One crime is, perhaps, to be committed in order to expiate another.

Society is, to every thoughtful observer, divisible into classes. It may be that no two persons, in their analysis, would draw the boundaries in precisely the same place; but let each man divide for himself, and when he has gained a distinct notion of the several sections, he will find that he has divided the wrongs, sins, crimes, offenses-or by whatever term are called the infractions of those laws to which man is created subject-committed | all who love to shake the "light fantastic toe."

by the whole, in about the same proportions. Each class enjoys an equal share of the common turpitude, though each will exhibit that turpitude in its own peenliar way, and in pursuit of its own favorite vices and gratifications. In this estimate, however, we must measure, not by any conventional rule in respect to the Dr. N. C. Daniels; Secretary, H. T. Armstrong; act, but by that which is the only real standard of rectitude in human thingsthe intention. The greatest offenders are those which sin against the clearest lights; not those which commit-according to the statute-the highest crimes. It needs but a single glance at the assembled conviets of a State prison, to see that they are imperfect men-ereatures who, through defective intellectual development, are wanting in the capacity to appreciate moral motives-hovering upon the verge of idiocy, and by every gust of passion swept over the boundary-mere animals, whose conceptions never rise above the means to satisfy their appetites. They are cunning-always evidence of meanness of intellect; passionate, and when aroused insanely cruel. In respect to such people, virtuous indignation is out of place. They are to be pitied and cared for. The ruling older who sits berespective administrations, they are of no neath the pulpit twice on every Sabbath, supports half a dozen colporteurs in various parts of the heathen world, stands recorded as a bright and shining light in as the regular officers. all the religious magazines of the day, is called upon to head every subscription for charitable purposes that circulates in the city, and who stands and lies over his counter to men, women and children for six days in the week, to increase his profits, is, we suspect, in the sight of God. a greater rogue than many a poor fellow who, clothed in reprobate stripes, drags out his weary years in the penitentiary. It is a very poor, narrow-souled, cowardly philosophy which, while it is ever ready to set up a Pharisaie howl over the occasional crimes of violence that occur, and deduce from thence that society can only be saved from dissolution by hanging style. somebody, has no feelings but those of profound reverence for the man who, by the basest of means, has accumulated his two or three hundred thousands. Perhaps the best mode for the physician to display his skill, is to cure his own infirmities; and when the exemplary classes of society have fully corrected their habits, and brought their morals to a state of pristine soundness, it will be time enough to go into mourning over the short-comings of the perishing and dangerous classes.

> EMERY D. POTTER has been confirmed Toledo. This is a point upon which there has been a great deal of controversy, and not a little hard swearing between the two platoons of the Democracy-Potter being the representative of the Buchanan, and somebody else of the DougLas side of of Mr. BUCHANAN, in the course of the eampaign, have contributed not a little to that condition of mental uncertainty under which he is said to labor.

> EVER since the French Emperor shook his head in an ominous manner at the Austrian Ambassador-which happened on Christmas last-the public journals of Europe and America have been rife with rumors and conjectures of approaching hostilities between the two great powers of the continent. The facts of the case appear to be very few; the inventions are. however, enormous, and the amount of ignorance displayed almost miraculous.

> WE are indebted to Senator SLADE, of Cuyahoga, for a copy of his speech against the repeal of the ten per cent. law. As the law has been repealed, it is fair to infer that the speech did not produce the expected effect. It is an interesting document, however, especially as the arguments and course of reasoning appear to tell a little more strongly for than against the repeal.

ST. PAUL's epistles are about to be tele graphed through from New York to an enterprising newspaper firm in Cincinnati, to be issued in advance of the mails. An agent of the concern is now at work, arranging for one of the most astonishing feats in the publishing line known since printing was invented.

In boring an artesian well, at Louisville, the remains of some pre-Adamite monster have been reached, which communicates to the water a taste and smell very peculiar. Some think that its supureria qualities will put Blue Lick entirely out of fashion.
